Scope

Scandinavian Journal of Information Systems is created with the purpose of opening a window from the Scandinavian research community to information systems researchers in the rest of the world. All contributions must represent, reflect upon or relate to Scandinavian information systems research. The research presented must, in other words, either itself be Scandinavian or reflect upon Scandinavian research.

It is our goal to present research contributions of high, international quality. The journal is edited by four persons representing the Scandinavian countries, but many other Scandinavian and international researchers participate in refereeing submitted papers.

We encourage our readers to send us contributions. See details in the back of this issue. In addition we invite selected persons to present their latest research in the journal.

In the debate forum the journal will publish critical notices and criticism with a clear address in order to make it possible to get a dialogue going. Critical notices will normally be sent to those being attacked for response before they are published. The debate editor will take initiatives to bring about debates, but will of course be dependent on suggestions and material supplied by the community. Please submit your contributions as well as suggestions for debates. See details in the back of this issue.
