The present issue of our journal contains, as is customary, a mixed collection of contributions. Indeed, the broad variation in scope, theme and approach is a tradition of the Scandinavian Journal of Information Systems we seek to cultivate. The four papers by Vikkelsø; Ovaska, Rossi & Smolander; Nielsen & Jansen and Imsland & Sahay constituting this issue's research papers, demonstrate vividly but with interesting variation socially informed, critical perspectives on information systems.

We are happy for the revitalisation of our debate section. The current debate taps into the highly relevant, ongoing discourse on the analytic framing of our field. Thanks to everyone who contributed to making this happen; without it there would be no debate!

It is with deep sadness we honour the memory of Claudio Ciborra. Thank you, Claudio, for your affectionate, provocative and colourful contributions to the Scandinavian IS research community over the last couple of decades.
